[The answer is not correct.]

[For the Dispatch.] Answer to the arithmetical problem in yesterday's Disputch:

Interest on the $1,000 at 6 per cent. amounts to $180. Interest actually paid, $280. Then by simple proportion 180: 280: 6: to answer—9; per cent. November 14, 2878.

When this was toldite them, their answer was, that while that was true, yet when the husbands were in Jail, where they were fed and warmed, their wives and children were left to starve and freeze for want of support. There is no perfect way of dealing with crime, but there is no worse way than the system of this State. Some years ago a leading lawyer of New York travelled wandering tribe of the desert, and, among other things, he told this wild ruler of our daws, and the ways we dealt with crime. He was heard with astonishment, and for the dirst time he himself was struck with their absurdities. After his return he used to say that be was never so thoroughly ashamed of his country as when he was telling his simple-minded auditor what laws we had apon these subjects, and bowthey were enforced. While we may not frame perfect systems, things-to simplify justice, and to break up the tendency to disorderly conduct and to wagrancy. We cannot hope to make any marked improvement in our jails. Each county must have one, and its population will determine the character of its place of confinement. Those in charge of them will be frequently changed, and, save in the large cities, the number and character of the allow our judges to impose punishments ter to deal with grave crimes.

This state of things is full of evil. If magistrates could bind them out to do work, of Georgie to spell his name "Davie" just or direct the minors to be chastised by parents or guardians or suitable persons, many would be saved from the moral leprosy which infects our jails. Such or like punishments would be inflicted, and there would be no excuse for letting offenders

Magistrates should have, in addition to their present powers, the same right of control over vagrants, disorderly persons, and habitual offenders which parents or guardians have over their children or wards. The fact that they belong to these classes should be judicially decided after a certain number of convictions. When they are thus enrolled in these classes they should have no right to vote at any election. As our laws now stand, notorious offenders who do no honest work, who can only live in immoral ways, are held to be innecent persons, when they are arrested, until the formal, technical, and sometimes expensive, proofs are furnished that they are guilty of prac-tices which there is a moral certainty they indulge in. This is right when they are accused of grave crimes. But there is no hardship in putting such persons, into that state of wardship in which the law places all persons who are under the age of twenty-one years, or who are afflicted with dis-intellects? There is no danger in giving magistrates the power over habitual offenders which parents and guardians have over minorethat of making them work, of binding them out, and of locking them up, and, in the case of children, having them chastised rather than sent to jails. There is no reason to fear that this panishment will be used too often or too karshly.
